

Preparing the Grimm01 Folk Tale Processing Set – “The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids” Guide

This guide provides step-by-step instructions to prepare the Grimm01 set for the tale “The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids”, ensuring it matches the style and quality of the Grimm00 example. We cover how to structure the Grimm01.pptx bilingual presentation, create the accompanying text and essay files, apply consistent formatting standards (fonts, spacing, layout), use proper citation formats for German and English texts, and maintain a uniform commentary tone and visual style across the project.

1. Grimm01 Presentation Structure and Content (Grimm01.pptx)

Design the Grimm01.pptx PowerPoint presentation to mirror the format of Grimm00, with clear sections for the story and its analysis. Key components include a title slide, bilingual story excerpt slides (German/English), and interpretive or analytical slides:

- Use Grimm00 as a Template: Begin by duplicating or using the Grimm00 presentation as a template. This ensures you carry over the same slide master, background design, font styles, and overall layout conventions. For example, if Grimm00 uses a specific theme or color scheme, apply that to Grimm01 for consistency.
- Title Slide: Create a title slide similar to Grimm00's:
 - Include the story title in both languages, e.g. “Der Wolf und die sieben jungen Geißlein / The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids.” Use a large, clear font (the same font Grimm00 used for titles) and a bold styling for visibility. Typically, the title is centered and in title case.
 - Add the attribution just below the title, such as “A fairy tale by Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm” and (if desired) “English Translation by [Translator Name]” in a slightly smaller font. This mirrors Grimm00's practice of crediting the original authors and translator on the title slide.
 - Maintain uniform formatting: for instance, if Grimm00 used 44 pt Times New Roman for the title and 18 pt for subtitle text, do the same. Ensure the title slide looks clean and sets the tone for a scholarly yet visually appealing presentation.
 - (Optional Visual): If Grimm00's title slide included an image or illustration (such as an old-fashioned drawing related to the tale), include a similar public domain image for “The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids” on the title slide. Place it in a manner consistent with Grimm00 (e.g., a faded background image or a small illustration beside the title). This adds visual interest but is not required if Grimm00 did not use images. Keep any image subtle so it doesn't overpower the title text. (Be sure any image is free to use, and if Grimm00 cited image sources, do likewise.)
- Bilingual Story Excerpt Slides: Present the tale's text in both German and English on the slides, following the format established in Grimm00:
- Slide Breaks: Divide the story into logical segments and allocate these segments to a series of slides. Each slide should contain a manageable chunk of text (to avoid overcrowding) that represents the same portion of the story in both languages. For example, Slide 2 might cover the opening scene (mother goat warning her kids), Slide 3 the wolf's first attempt, and so on. Break at natural narrative points like paragraph breaks or scene changes, just as Grimm00 did.

- Layout – Side by Side or Top/Bottom: Use the same bilingual layout style as Grimm00 for each story slide. If Grimm00 placed the original and translation side by side in two columns, do that here: e.g. a two-column table or two text boxes, with German on the left and English on the right. Ensure corresponding sentences or paragraphs line up across the columns so readers can compare easily. Alternatively, if Grimm00 stacked the languages (German text at the top of the slide, English below it), follow that approach. In either case, label or differentiate the languages clearly (you can prefix with “DE:” and “EN:” labels if it was done in Grimm00, or use different text styling).
- Font and Text Styling: Use a legible font for story text (Grimm00 likely used a serif font like Times New Roman or Georgia for narrative text, for a classic look). Keep the font style and size consistent between German and English text, unless Grimm00 deliberately used italics or a different color for one language (for example, perhaps English text in italic to set it apart – use the same method if so). A typical readable size for body text on slides is around 18–24 pt. Maintain line spacing similar to Grimm00’s slides – usually 1.15 or 1.5 line spacing helps readability for blocks of text. Avoid long paragraphs; if a paragraph is very long, consider splitting it into two slides, as was done in Grimm00 to keep text digestible.
- Example: If the first story slide in Grimm00 showed the first few lines in German with an English translation alongside, do the same for Grimm01. For instance, present:
German: “Es war einmal eine alte Geiß, die hatte sieben junge Geißlein...” (in the left column or top)
English: “Once upon a time there was an old goat who had seven little kids...” (in the right column or below the German) ensuring both appear together. Continue this pattern for each subsequent segment of the tale.
- Source Citations on Slides: Just like in Grimm00, cite the source of the text at least once (preferably on each slide or at the end of the story section). Typically, you might include a small reference in the footer or beneath the text. For example, on the first story slide or in the footer area, add a line in smaller font: “Source: Grimm, Kinder- und Hausmärchen, no. 5” ¹ ; English translation by D. L. Ashliman ¹ .” This matches Grimm00’s practice of crediting the original German edition and the translator. If Grimm00 used a numeric footnote or bracket system, use the same format (e.g., a superscript number that corresponds to a reference list). Ensure both the German text source and English translation source are credited in the same manner as Grimm00. For instance, Grimm00 may have cited the 1857 Grimm edition and a specific translator – do likewise here with the appropriate details for tale #5.
 - German text reference: The Grimm brothers’ final edition or a reputable source of the original text. Example: “Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm, Kinder- und Hausmärchen, 7th ed. (1857), no. 5” ¹ .
 - English text reference: The translator and publication. Example: “Translation by D.L. Ashliman (2002)” ² or another translation if you use one (e.g., “Translation by Margaret Hunt (1884)” if using a public domain version). Use the same citation style as Grimm00 (whether it’s APA, MLA, or a simple descriptive note).
- Interpretive/Analytical Slides: After the story text slides, include several slides devoted to analysis, commentary, and interpretation, mimicking the structure from Grimm00:
- Section Title: Start the analysis section with a clear heading slide or a distinct title, such as “Analysis & Commentary” (unless Grimm00 titled it differently). This slide can be simple – e.g., a title and perhaps an icon or image – to signal the transition from story to commentary.
- Content of Analysis Slides: Cover similar categories of insights as Grimm00. Common interpretive elements might include:
 - Background & Source: Identify the origin of the tale in Grimm scholarship. For example, note that the Grimms collected “The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids” from the Hassenpflug family and first published it as tale no.5 in the 1812 edition ³ . Mention any Aarne-Thompson-

- Uther (ATU) classification for the tale; e.g. "This story is classified as ATU type 123 (The Wolf and the Kids)" ³ . Grimm00 likely included such context, so ensure Grimm01 does as well.
- Themes & Moral: Discuss the major themes, motifs, and moral lessons of the story. For instance, highlight the cautionary message for children (obey your mother, beware of strangers) and the representation of the wolf as a symbol of deceit and danger. Use a neutral, scholarly tone as in Grimm00 – e.g., "This tale emphasizes the importance of heeding parental warnings. The wolf's deception (disguising his voice and paw) illustrates the theme of trickery vs. innocence, while the fate of the wolf delivers a clear moral about evil being punished." Keep the tone explanatory and analytical rather than overly casual or anecdotal.
 - Comparative Notes: If Grimm00's commentary compared the tale with others, do the same here. You can note parallels to other folklore or Grimm stories. For example, "This tale bears resemblance to other folktales with a predatory wolf, such as The Three Little Pigs (another story of a wolf outwitted by his would-be prey)" ⁴ . The climactic scene – filling the sleeping wolf's belly with stones – is a motif that also appears in the Grimms' Little Red Cap (Little Red Riding Hood)" ⁵ , showing how the Grimms reused folkloric elements across stories." Including such comparisons (as Grimm00 likely did) provides deeper insight and shows continuity in the Grimm canon.
 - Symbolism & Interpretation: Delve into any symbolic or cultural interpretations. For instance, comment on the portrayal of the mother goat as a savior figure, the wolf as an ever-present danger in forests (drawing on possible real-world fears of wolves in Europe) ⁶ ⁷ , or any psychoanalytic readings if appropriate. Keep the commentary structured similarly to Grimm00's essay highlights – perhaps one slide on moral/Symbolism, one on historical context, one on variants or influence.
 - Slide Format: Structure these slides in a clear, engaging way. Likely, Grimm00 used short paragraphs or bullet points rather than dense text for analysis slides. Follow suit by breaking text into bullets or sub-points for clarity. For example, a slide titled "Themes" might list 2-3 bullet points: "Obedience vs. Disobedience: The kids ignore the mother's warning at their peril, teaching children to trust parental guidance. Deception: The wolf's tricks (chalk to soften voice, flour on paw) highlight the idea that evil can mask itself. Justice: The story ends with the wolf punished (drowned by the weight of stones), restoring moral order." This bullet format makes it easy to scan, just as Grimm00's analysis likely did.
 - Citations on Analysis Slides: If you cite specific facts or scholarly insights (for example, quoting a folklorist or referencing the ATU classification), provide citations in the same format Grimm00 used. This might be a footnote on the slide, a bracketed [#] linking to a source, or just a source credit in parentheses. For instance, when noting the ATU type or Grimms' source, you could add "(Grimm 1812, no.5)" or a footnote like "¹Grimm 1812 (Vol.1)" ³ " and "²Aarne-Thompson-Uther type 123" ⁸ ". Maintain whatever citation style was established (Grimm00 might have used brief footnotes or end-of-presentation references; duplicate that method).
 - Conclusion Slide (Optional): If Grimm00 ended with a concluding slide or a final thought, include one for Grimm01 as well. This could simply be a "The End" slide with a closing thought or a thank-you, or a bibliography/references slide if Grimm00 listed full citations at the end. For consistency, match Grimm00's approach:
 - If Grimm00 provided a list of sources on the last slide, prepare a similar References slide for Grimm01. List the bibliographic details for the German source text, English translation, and any other references used (such as scholarly articles or footnotes from analysis). Use a consistent citation format (e.g., MLA or APA style entries, or whatever format Grimm00 uses). For example: "Grimm, Jacob and Wilhelm. Kinder- und Hausmärchen, 7th ed., Berlin, 1857, no. 5." and "Ashliman, D. L., translator. 'The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids,' 2001." in appropriate format ¹ . Ensure this slide shares the same title format (e.g., “References” in bold at top) and font styling as Grimm00’s reference slide.

- If Grimm00 instead put all citations as footnotes on each slide and did not include a final bibliography slide, you may omit a references slide for Grimm01 as well. The key is to be consistent with the established method so that Grimm01 seamlessly fits into the larger collection.

By following the above, the Grimm01.pptx will have the same structure and look as Grimm00: a polished title, faithful bilingual story representation with citations, and insightful analysis slides.

2. Creating the Grimm01 Subdirectory Files

Along with the presentation, prepare the supporting files in a Grimm01 directory (folder). These typically include the full story texts in both languages, a citations/reference list, and an interpretive essay. Here’s how to create each, using Grimm00’s files as templates:

- Folder Structure: Create a folder named Grimm01 (parallel to Grimm00’s folder). Inside this folder, you will store:
 - Grimm01_German.txt (or .docx) – the full German text of the story.
 - Grimm01_English.txt (or .docx) – the full English text of the story.
 - Grimm01_Citations.txt (or .docx/.xlsx) – a file listing sources/citations.
 - Grimm01_Essay.docx – the interpretive essay document.
 - Any other supporting materials (images, notes) if applicable, though the above are the main files.
- Bilingual Story Text Files: Prepare the complete story in each language:
 - Grimm01_German.txt: Obtain the original German text of “Der Wolf und die sieben jungen Geißlein.” You might copy it from a reliable source such as a scanned Grimm book or a reputable digital text (for example, Project Gutenberg’s German text or the Grimmstories website). Ensure the text is exactly as in the source edition used. Grimm00 likely used the final 1857 edition text; use the same edition for consistency unless instructed otherwise. Format this file in plain text or Word with each paragraph clearly separated. Do not include the English here – this file is solely for the German text. Include the title and maybe a short header (e.g., “Grimm01 – Der Wolf und die sieben jungen Geißlein (German Original)”) at the top if Grimm00 did similarly. Make sure to preserve all German characters (ä, ö, ü, ß) correctly – use UTF-8 encoding for .txt to avoid any corruption.
 - Grimm01_English.txt: Similarly, get a complete English translation of the tale. Use the same translation source that Grimm00 utilized for its English text. For example, if Grimm00’s English text files were from a specific translator or edition, use the equivalent source for this story. Common public domain translations for Grimm tales include those by Margaret Hunt (1884) or Lucy Crane, or more modern ones like D.L. Ashliman (though Ashliman’s might be under copyright ⁹). Ideally, pick a translation in the public domain for easier use, unless the project has permission for a copyrighted one. Transcribe or copy the full English text, matching it paragraph by paragraph to the German text file. This alignment will help in cross-referencing and slide creation. At the top, you can label it “Grimm01 – The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids (English Translation)” for clarity. Use plain text or a simple Word format with no special styling (unless Grimm00 files had specific formatting).
- Quality Check: After preparing both text files, compare them to ensure paragraph breaks correspond (paragraph 1 of German corresponds to paragraph 1 of English, etc.). This makes creating bilingual slides easier. Also verify that the English translation is complete and accurate. If the translation has archaic language but Grimm00 aimed for modern readability, consider adding a note or using a slightly modernized version, depending on the established practice.

- Citation/Reference File (Grimm01_Citations): Create a file to compile all sources and references related to Grimm01, modeled on Grimm00's citations file:
- This file serves as a master reference list for the story's texts and any research references. If Grimm00 provided a .txt or .docx listing "German text from [Source], English text from [Source], additional references...", follow that exact format.
- Include the story text sources: e.g., a line for the German source: "German Text: Kinder- und Hausmärchen, 1857 (No.5) – sourced from Grimm brothers' original text ¹ ." Then a line for the English source: "English Translation: by [Translator Name], [Publication info or URL] ⁹ ." Provide enough detail that someone can find the source (edition, year, publisher or URL if online). This matches Grimm00's citation detail level.
- Include academic references: If during the commentary/essay you use any external references (scholarly articles, books, or websites for analysis), list them here as well. For example, if you reference the Aarne-Thompson index or a commentary by Jack Zipes, include full citations for those sources in this file. Use a consistent citation style (Grimm00 might have used APA in text and listed full references in this file, or perhaps Chicago style footnotes – continue with the same system). Each reference could be on its own line or formatted as a mini bibliography.
- Formatting: If Grimm00_Citations was a plain text list with bullet points or numbering, do the same. If it was an Excel or table, replicate that structure (e.g., columns for source type, citation, etc.). Ensure the file name and extension mirror Grimm00's practice (e.g., if Grimm00 has a .docx with full citations, also use .docx for Grimm01).
- The citations file is essentially your reference backup and aids anyone reviewing the project to see all sources at a glance, without combing through slides. It's also useful when compiling the larger collection's bibliography.
- Interpretive Essay (Grimm01_Essay.docx): Write a detailed essay analyzing "The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids," following the same tone, structure, and formatting as Grimm00_Essay.docx:
- Purpose: This essay provides a more in-depth interpretation and commentary on the tale than what is on the slides. While the slides give a summary of analysis, the essay should present a well-structured, narrative discussion (likely a few pages long) of the story's meaning, context, and significance.
- Tone and Style: Match the tone used in Grimm00's essay. If Grimm00 was written in an academic, third-person style (which is likely, given the context), do the same here. The tone should be scholarly yet accessible – for instance, analytical and informative without being overly casual or too jargon-heavy. Avoid personal anecdotes or first-person, unless Grimm00 specifically included personal reflections (usually it wouldn't in a research context). Write as if an academic folklorist or literature scholar is explaining the tale.
- Structure: Organize the essay into clear sections or paragraphs with logical flow:
 - Introduction: Begin by introducing the tale, perhaps a brief summary and its place in the Grimm collection. (E.g., "The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids' is a classic Brothers Grimm fairy tale (KHM 5) that narrates how a mother goat's warning to her kids is tested by a cunning wolf. This essay examines the tale's themes of deception, obedience, and justice, as well as its connections to other folklore." This sets up the analysis, much like Grimm00's intro likely did.)
 - Background: A paragraph on the tale's origin and publication history – who told it to the Grimms, which edition(s) it appeared in, and any notable changes. Include details like those found for Grimm00's story. For example, mention it was collected from a specific source (the Hassenpflug family) and included in the first edition of 1812 ¹⁰ . You might note if the Grimm version was toned down or edited in later editions (many Grimm tales were revised in style or violence over editions).

- Summary of Plot: Briefly recap the key events in your own words (unless Grimm00's essay skips summary because the reader has the story text; include it if Grimm00 did). This ensures the essay is self-contained.
- Analysis of Themes/Motifs: Discuss the major themes (e.g., parental authority, cunning vs. innocence, punishment of evil). Provide insight into each theme using evidence from the story. For instance, explain how the wolf's disguises and the children's vulnerability illustrate the danger of stranger deception, a common cautionary motif for kids. Support interpretations with references if available (for example, cite a folklorist's interpretation or compare with another tale's motif as evidence). In this section, integrate any scholarly perspectives that Grimm00 essays tend to include. For example, you could mention Jack Zipes or other scholars if they've commented on this tale's meaning or role in the Grimm corpus.
- Comparative Analysis: It could strengthen the essay to compare The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids to other similar stories (the slides might touch on this, but the essay can elaborate). For instance, explain how this tale is an analogue to Little Red Riding Hood – both feature a wolf and innocent victims, but one ends more violently for the wolf than the other. You might say, “Notably, the ending in which the wolf is killed by filling his belly with stones appears in Little Red Cap as well, suggesting the Grimms borrowed this satisfying punishment motif from The Wolf and the Seven Kids for the Red Riding Hood story ¹¹.” ⁷ Such comparative notes show deeper research (ensure any such inclusion mirrors the depth of Grimm00's essay).
- Cultural or Symbolic Context: If Grimm00 essays include context about what the tale reflects about society (e.g., fears of wolves in rural Europe, or lessons about not leaving children unattended), address those. For example, “The tale likely served as a warning in an era when wolves were a real threat; it personifies the predator to teach children vigilance. Historically, wolves in folklore often symbolized dangerous strangers or even alluded to fears like werewolves in 16th-century Europe ⁶.” This adds scholarly context. Use references if appropriate, and keep it concise.
- Conclusion: Wrap up the essay by summarizing how the tale fits into the Grimm collection's goals or its lasting impact. Grimm00's conclusion might have mentioned why the story is significant or what modern readers can learn. Do similarly for Grimm01. For example, “In conclusion, 'The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids' embodies the Grimm brothers' blend of fright and fortitude – scaring children into obedience while ultimately reinforcing that evil will be outwitted and punished. Its enduring motifs have echoed in other fairy tales and continue to be retold, underscoring the tale's prominent place in folklore.”
- Formatting the Essay: Adhere to the same formatting guidelines as Grimm00_Essay.docx:
 - Use the same font (e.g., Times New Roman, 12 pt for body text, if that's what Grimm00 uses in essays).
 - Maintain standard academic formatting: 1-inch margins, double-spacing or 1.5 spacing (check Grimm00; many academic essays use double-spacing for ease of reading and annotation). Paragraphs should be indented or have spacing after, consistent with the template.
 - Include a title on the first page. Possibly the essay's title might be the story name again or something like “Interpretive Essay – The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids (Grimm01)”. If Grimm00 had a cover page or just a header, replicate it. For instance, a centered bold title, the tale name, and maybe the series (like Bilingual Grimm Collection).
 - Citation style in essay: Use the same style as Grimm00. Likely, sources were cited with either footnotes or parenthetical citations. If footnotes were used (common in humanities essays), use Word's footnote function to cite books or articles you reference. For example, when you mention the tale's ATU classification or a scholar's comment, add a footnote with the source. Alternatively, if Grimm00 used MLA parenthetical citations, do that (e.g., (Zipes, Brothers Grimm, p.15) in-text). Include a References or Works Cited section at the end of the essay, listing all works cited, if that was done in Grimm00_Essay. This likely overlaps with the Grimm01_Citations file, but the essay should be self-contained with its citations.

- Length and depth: Ensure the essay length is comparable to Grimm00's essay. For example, if Grimm00_Essay was ~3 pages, aim for a similar length for Grimm01_Essay, covering the points adequately but not excessively. The style should be consistent so that when all essays are compiled, they read as a unified collection of analyses.

By creating these files carefully, you'll have a complete Grimm01 package: the story text in both languages, a citations list, and an analytical essay – all paralleling the Grimm00 materials. Store them in the Grimm01 directory for easy reference. This will make it easy to integrate into the larger collection and for any future editors or researchers to find the needed components.

3. Formatting Standards (Fonts, Spacing, and Layout)

Consistent formatting is crucial for a uniform look and feel across the Grimm collection. Follow the standards set by Grimm00 in every aspect of text and layout:

- Font Choices: Use the same fonts as Grimm00 throughout. Typically, presentations use a sans-serif font for slides (like Arial, Calibri, or Helvetica) for clarity, or a serif for a more storybook feel if that was chosen. Check Grimm00.pptx:
- For slide titles and headings, Grimm00 might have used a decorative or bold font. Use that exact font and size for all Grimm01 titles. (E.g., Arial Black 32 pt for slide headings, or Garamond 36 pt if that was the style.)
- For body text (story text and bullets), use the same font and size as Grimm00. If story excerpts were in a serif font (to mimic book text) at 20 pt, continue that. If analysis bullets were in a sans-serif at 18 pt, do the same. Consistency in font type and size between Grimm00 and Grimm01 is essential so slides from both look like parts of one series.
- Avoid mixing too many fonts. Generally, stick to two fonts maximum (one for titles, one for body) unless Grimm00 used more. Use italics and bolding sparingly and only in the same way (for example, maybe Grimm00 italicized non-English words or book titles, etc.).
- Title Text Formatting: For both the presentation title slide and any section headers:
- Use Title Case (capitalize major words) or the same case style Grimm00 used. If Grimm00's title was all caps or had a specific color, replicate that. For example, "GRIMM01 – THE WOLF AND THE SEVEN YOUNG KIDS" might be in all caps if Grimm00 did "GRIMM00 – [Title]" similarly. Or if Grimm00 kept titles in normal case with italic for German, do the exact same.
- Ensure the story name in German is formatted the same way as Grimm00's German titles. Possibly Grimm00 italicized the foreign-language title or put it in quotes – match that convention. The English title might have been in parentheses or on a new line – again, follow suit.
- The title text should be prominently placed and possibly stylized (shadows, outlines) if that was part of Grimm00's design. Use the same text effects so Grimm01 doesn't stand out as different.
- Line Spacing and Alignment: Maintain uniform spacing for readability:
- For slide text, do not crowd the slides. Grimm00 likely kept line spacing at least at 1.15 or more. Use the same line spacing value. For example, if the story text looked airy, it might have been 1.5-spaced. Match it so that the bilingual text is easy on the eyes. Similarly, bullet points in analysis slides might be single-spaced with a space between bullets. Keep that consistent.

- Paragraph breaks: If Grimm00 inserted an extra line between paragraphs of the story on slides (to clearly separate them), do that too. In the text files and essay, follow standard paragraph formatting (indentation or spacing) exactly as in Grimm00's files.
- Align text appropriately. Likely, story text might be left-aligned (easier to read in blocks) rather than centered. Bullet points should also be left-aligned. If two-column layout is used, ensure both columns are aligned in the same way (usually left or justified). Avoid justified text on slides if Grimm00 didn't use it, as it can create odd spacing. However, in the essay Word doc, you might justify text if that's a standard academic look – only do so if Grimm00_Essay did.
- Slide Layout Conventions: Follow the same slide layout guidelines as Grimm00 for a professional look:
- Consistent margins: Use the same content margins on slides (i.e., don't place text too close to edges; use similar text box sizes and positions as in Grimm00). You might use Grimm00.pptx as a literal template – copy a story text slide from Grimm00 and replace the text with Grimm01's text, so the position and spacing remain identical.
- Headers/Footers: If Grimm00 slides have a footer with the project name or slide number, be sure to update those for Grimm01. For example, maybe each slide in Grimm00 has a small footer like "Bilingual Grimm Tales – Grimm00" with the slide number. Update the label to "Grimm01" in the footer, and continue the numbering scheme appropriately. If slide numbers were shown, ensure they appear in the same corner and font as before.
- Background and Colors: Apply the same background color or image as Grimm00. If Grimm00 used a plain white background, stick to white. If it used a textured parchment background (common for fairy tale presentations), use the same file or style for Grimm01. Consistency in background prevents any jarring visual differences. Likewise, use the same text color (probably black or dark, unless white text on a dark background was a choice – match exactly). Ensure contrast for readability remains high.
- Slide Transitions and Animations: If the Grimm00 presentation used any slide transition effects or text animations, use them similarly in Grimm01. For instance, if each slide appeared with a fade effect, set Grimm01 slides to do the same. However, if Grimm00 kept things simple (likely in an academic context they did), it's fine to have no fancy animations. The key is not to introduce new effects that weren't in Grimm00.
- Logos or Decorative Elements: If the Grimm00 template includes a logo (for example, a Grimm project logo or institution logo) or decorative border, ensure those are present in Grimm01 as well. Check the slide master in Grimm00 for any such elements (like a small castle icon in a corner, etc.), and include identical elements in Grimm01's master.
- Length and Pace: Note how many slides Grimm00 used for the story relative to the story length, and try to emulate that pacing. For instance, if Grimm00's story (maybe of similar length) took 10 slides of text, aim for a similar count for Grimm01's text so that text per slide is comparable. The analysis section length should also be comparable (e.g., if Grimm00 had 5 analysis slides, Grimm01 should not suddenly have 15 or only 1 – keep it balanced).
- Consistency Across Collection: Remember that Grimm01 is part of a larger bilingual Grimm collection, so every formatting decision should make it blend seamlessly with Grimm00 and future Grimm02, Grimm03, etc. By using identical fonts, layouts, and structures, someone viewing the entire collection will see it as one cohesive body of work.

Following these formatting standards will ensure that Grimm01 not only looks professional but also matches the aesthetic and style of Grimm00 exactly. Consistency is key to a polished collection.

4. Citation and Referencing Format (German Original and English Translation)

Accurate citation of sources is crucial, especially for a bilingual text project. Grimm00 established a format for referencing the original German text and the English translation – Grimm01 must follow the same format so that references are handled uniformly. Here's how to manage citations and references for Grimm01:

- Mirroring Grimm00's Citation Style: First, identify what citation style or format Grimm00 used for references:
- Did Grimm00 use footnotes with numbers on slides and in the essay? (e.g., superscript numbers linking to a reference list).
- Or did it use APA/MLA style in-text citations (e.g., (Grimm 1857) or (Hunt, 1884))?
- Perhaps it used a simple descriptive caption style for the story sources (as given in the example above with Grimm site) and a more formal bibliography at the end.
- Apply the same method consistently. If uncertain, a safe approach (common in such projects) is: footnote or parenthetically cite sources where relevant, and have a reference list slide and/or citations file with full details.
- Citing the Original German Text: You must reference the edition of the German text you used. Grimm00 likely cited the Grimm Brothers' primary source for the story. For example, if using the final 7th edition (1857) of Kinder- und Hausmärchen, cite it as such. The citation might look like:
- "Original German text from: Kinder- und Hausmärchen by Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm, final edition (1857), Story No. 5." You might include publication info if available (publisher, etc.), or a URL if you got it online (e.g., a Project Gutenberg e-text).
- If Grimm00 provided a footnote, use a similar one: "Jacob & Wilhelm Grimm, KHM (1857) no.5 ¹." The snippet from the University of Pittsburgh site shows an example citation of the German source ¹. You can model yours on that, adjusted for your edition or source.
- Ensure this citation appears either on the first slide of the story, on a references slide, and/or in the citations file exactly as per Grimm00's practice. Anyone reading should clearly know which Grimm edition or source text you used.
- Citing the English Translation: Likewise, credit the translator and source of the English version:
- If using a known translation, cite it by translator name, year, and if from a book, the book details; if from a website, the site name and URL (if allowed). For example: "English translation by D. L. Ashliman (2001) ²." or "English translation from Grimm's Household Tales, trans. Margaret Hunt, 1884."
- On slides, this might be abbreviated (e.g., "Trans. Hunt, 1884"). In the essay or citations file, provide full bibliographic info: Hunt, Margaret, translator. Grimm's Household Tales. London: etc... (if Grimm00 listed it similarly).
- The key is to match Grimm00's format. If Grimm00 used MLA style, for instance, then your English text citation should also be MLA. If it used Chicago footnotes, do that. Consistency in citation style within Grimm01 and across all Grimm projects is important for professionalism.
- Placement of Citations (Slides): Grimm00's slides likely handled citations in one of two ways:
- Footer Notes: A small text box at the bottom with references for that slide's content. This is often done for image credits or text credits in presentations. If Grimm00 did this (e.g., a line in italics at bottom, 10pt font, citing sources), implement the same in Grimm01. For instance, at the bottom of a story slide: Source: Grimm (1857) ¹ ; Trans. Ashliman ² . And at the bottom of an analysis slide: Source: Zipes, "Brothers Grimm", p.15. (if quoting Zipes).

- End Notes Slide: Alternatively, some presentations just put a number and list sources at the end. If Grimm00 did that, you would put something like “[1] Grimm 1857” as a superscript and then on the references slide list [1] with full info. Do exactly the same numbering and format.
- Double-check Grimm00’s method and replicate it so that someone could flip between Grimm00 and Grimm01 slides and see the same approach to citing.
- Within the Essay: In the Grimm01_Essay.docx, maintain rigorous academic citation as well:
 - Use the same citation style as Grimm00’s essay. If footnotes were used for references, use footnotes in Grimm01_Essay at the appropriate points (Word’s insert footnote tool will handle numbering). Each footnote should give the source detail. For example, when you mention the ATU classification or a scholar, footnote it: “¹ Stith Thompson, The Types of the Folktale, ATU 123.” or “² Zipes, Jack. The Complete Fairy Tales of the Brothers Grimm, p. XX.” (whichever sources you actually use).
 - If Grimm00_Essay instead used inline citations (author-date), stick to that format. E.g., (Zipes 2014, 45) and then have the bibliography entry at the end.
- Reference List in Essay: Include a “Works Cited” or “Bibliography” at the end of the essay if that’s what Grimm00 did, listing all sources like the Grimm text, translation, and any scholarly works or footnotes. This likely overlaps with the Grimm01_Citations file, but ensure the essay document can stand alone with its references.
- Citation for Commentary Sources: If you bring in external information (like the Grimms’ source of the tale, historical context, or comparative folklore info), cite where you got this info. For instance, “The Grimms noted that this tale came from the Hassenpflug family ¹⁰” – the citation points to a credible source confirming that (perhaps the annotation in the Grimm book or a scholarly site as given). Or if stating “This tale is classified as ATU type 123”, cite the Aarne-Thompson index source or the Pitt website which confirms it ⁸. This gives your work authority and allows readers to verify details, just as in Grimm00.
- As an example, the University of Pittsburgh’s folktale archive entry provides those details we might use ³ – Grimm00 likely used similar references. Use such reliable sources to back up facts.
- Ensure any direct quotes in the essay are within quotation marks and followed by a citation. Paraphrased ideas should also get a citation credit. Maintain academic integrity just like Grimm00.
- Citation File vs. Presentation/Essay: There may be some redundancy between the standalone citations file and the references listed in the presentation or essay. That’s fine and intended – the citations file is a master list (internal use or appendix), while the presentation and essay are deliverables that each need their own citations visible. Don’t omit citations in slides or essay assuming the separate file covers it; each part of the project should credit sources independently (as Grimm00 presumably did).
- Proofread for Consistency: After compiling Grimm01, cross-verify all references:
 - Spellings of author names, titles, and years should match exactly how they appeared in Grimm00 for similar sources. E.g., if Grimm00 wrote “Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm (1812)”, don’t write “Grimms, 1812” in Grimm01 – keep it identical in style.
 - Check that every citation used in slides or essay has a full reference entry in the citations file (and in the essay bibliography if applicable).
 - If Grimm00 numbered references in a certain order, consider if the numbering continues for Grimm01 or resets. Most likely each presentation resets numbering starting at [1] for its own sources. So Grimm01 would have its own [1], [2], etc., not a continuation from Grimm00. The citations file is per story, so that’s fine.
- Example of Final Citation Formatting: Suppose Grimm00 used Chicago style footnotes. Then in Grimm01_Essay you might have footnote 1: “Jacob Grimm and Wilhelm Grimm, Children’s and Household Tales, trans. Margaret Hunt (London: George Bell, 1884), tale 5.” and footnote 2: “D. L. Ashliman, translator, ‘The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids,’ 2001, <http://...> (accessed date).” and so on.

Meanwhile, the Grimm01_Citations.txt would list these two in a neat list. If Grimm00 used MLA, you'd instead format: Grimm, Jacob and Wilhelm. "Der Wolf und die sieben jungen Geißlein." 1857. Print. etc., and so forth.

By adhering to the above, Grimm01 will properly credit all sources in the same manner as Grimm00, making the scholarship trustworthy. The goal is that any reader can easily identify and locate the original German text and the English translation used, as well as any reference used in analysis, without confusion or inconsistency between Grimm00 and Grimm01.

5. Commentary Tone, Structure, and Visual Layout Standards

To integrate smoothly into the larger bilingual Grimm collection, Grimm01's commentary (both in slides and essay) and visual presentation should follow the same tone, structure, and layout conventions as Grimm00. Here's how to maintain those standards:

- Commentary Tone: The voice of the analysis/commentary in Grimm01 should echo that of Grimm00:
- Academic and Neutral: Likely, Grimm00's commentary was written in a third-person academic tone. Continue this approach – write objectively and authoritatively about the tale. For example, use phrases like "the tale illustrates...", "this suggests that...", "one interpretation is that..." rather than a personal tone like "I think..." or overly casual language.
- Accessible Language: While scholarly, it should still be clear and accessible to readers who might not be experts. Grimm00 probably struck a balance by explaining concepts (like what ATU 123 means, or who the Hassenpflug family were) in plain language. Do the same – if you introduce a term or context, provide a brief explanation so the reader understands. E.g., "(ATU 123 is the international folktale classification for 'The Wolf and the Kids' story type)" if such a note is needed, unless Grimm00 assumed the audience knows it.
- Consistent Perspective: If Grimm00 sometimes addressed the reader directly or posed rhetorical questions, you can mimic that style. Alternatively, if it was strictly expository, avoid any stylistic divergence. Consistency across stories matters: a reader shouldn't feel Grimm01 was written by a different person in a different style. It might help to literally read Grimm00's commentary and mirror its sentence structure complexity, use of passive/active voice, etc., in your writing.
- Length and Depth of Commentary: Ensure you discuss the story with comparable depth. If Grimm00 provided, say, historical context, thematic analysis, and a brief conclusion, ensure Grimm01 does all those in proportion. Don't introduce entirely new sections (like psychological analysis) that Grimm00 didn't, or omit sections that Grimm00 did include. The structure of the argument should feel familiar. For instance, if Grimm00 always starts commentary with tale background then theme then comparisons, stick to that order.
- Commentary Structure (Slides vs. Essay):
 - On slides, commentary is condensed into bullet points or short paragraphs. Make sure each analysis slide has a clear focus (just as Grimm00 would have one slide for "Background", one for "Themes", etc., instead of mixing everything on one slide). The structure within a slide should be logical – e.g., start with a key statement or heading, then supporting points. If Grimm00 used mini headings on slides (like "Theme 1: Obedience" as a bold lead-in to a bullet), you do the same.
 - In the essay, the structure is more fluid text but should still have clear sections as described earlier. Possibly use subheadings in the essay if Grimm00 did (like "Background", "Themes", etc.). If Grimm00's essay didn't use subheadings (many essays just flow in paragraphs), then maintain a similar flowing style but ensure each paragraph clearly deals with a specific aspect, in the same sequence Grimm00 did.

- Use of Examples: In commentary, it's good to reference specific moments from the story to support points (Grimm00 likely did this). For instance, when discussing themes, you might quote or paraphrase a line from the story (with citation) to illustrate, such as the wolf's quote or the mother's warning. This grounds the analysis. Ensure any such usage parallels Grimm00's method (e.g., if Grimm00 italicized quotes from the story and put them in quotes, do likewise).
- Visual Layout of Commentary Slides: The design of analysis slides should be consistent with story slides and Grimm00's approach:
 - Possibly, Grimm00 might have used a slightly different color scheme or background for analysis slides to differentiate them (some projects do this, e.g., story slides with an old-paper background, analysis slides on a plain background). If that's the case, apply the same design switch for Grimm01. If Grimm00 kept all slides identical in style, then continue uniformly.
 - Keep slides uncluttered. Use the same font and size as story slides or a coordinated style that Grimm00 used. Maybe Grimm00 made analysis text a tad smaller since they are bullet points; if so, replicate that exact size.
 - Use headings or icons consistently. For example, if Grimm00's "Themes" slide had a small book icon or a particular header style, copy that. Visual markers help continuity. If no such extras were in Grimm00, keep it simple.
 - Limit each slide to a reasonable amount of text (likely no more than 5-6 bullet points or a short paragraph and an image). If Grimm00 included any illustrations on commentary slides (perhaps not, but if say a picture of the Grimm brothers or an illustration of the wolf was shown), you could include a relevant image on a commentary slide as well. For instance, a silhouette of a wolf when discussing the wolf symbol. Only do this if Grimm00 used images in commentary; if Grimm00 was text-only, maintain that to stay uniform. Any images used should have consistent style (black-and-white drawings if that's what Grimm00 did, etc.). Always include a small citation for images as Grimm00 likely did (e.g., "Image: Illustration by X, 1909" in tiny text).
- Overall Visual Cohesion: As part of a larger collection, Grimm01's slides and content should visually and narratively mesh with others:
 - Stick to the same slide aspect ratio (likely 16:9 widescreen or 4:3 standard, whichever Grimm00 used) and resolution. Don't suddenly use a different size or style template.
 - If the project has numbering for tales (Grimm00, Grimm01, etc.), make sure to label accordingly on the title or in headers so that it's clear this is the next in series.
 - Keep an eye on the length of text on each slide relative to Grimm00. If Grimm00 favored brevity on slides, do not overcrowd Grimm01 slides with long text; conversely, if Grimm00 had thorough bullet points, don't skimp and make overly short phrases.
- Re-read everything in Grimm01 in context: pretend you just read/viewed Grimm00, then see if Grimm01 feels like it's continuing the same style or if anything sticks out as different. This includes checking tone of writing, slide design, and even small details like capitalization or punctuation consistency (e.g., if Grimm00 consistently used the Oxford comma or em-dashes, do the same).
- Peer Review (if possible): If working in a team, have someone else compare Grimm00 and Grimm01 side by side to catch any discrepancies in format or tone. Sometimes we miss small differences that another set of eyes or a checklist can catch (for example, maybe Grimm00 italicized the story title everywhere it appeared – ensure Grimm01 does too).

By adhering to these commentary and visual layout standards, Grimm01's content will read and look like an organic extension of Grimm00's work. The tone will be scholarly and consistent, the structure logical and parallel, and the visual presentation uniform. This consistency is what will ultimately allow the entire collection of bilingual Grimm tales to feel cohesive and professional, as if crafted by the same hand with the same vision.

In summary, preparing the Grimm01 set for “The Wolf and the Seven Young Kids” involves replicating the successful template of Grimm00 at every level. Start with the Grimm00 PPT as a base, include the story in German and English side-by-side with proper source credits, and add thoughtful analysis slides modeled on the previous example. Create the supporting text files (German original, English translation) and an in-depth essay, all formatted and written in the same style as their Grimm00 counterparts. Use consistent fonts, layouts, and citation practices so that Grimm01 matches Grimm00 seamlessly in the larger bilingual Grimm collection. Following these guidelines will ensure a high-quality, uniform presentation and documentation that maintains the integrity and scholarly value of the project, just as was achieved with Grimm00. Happy crafting of Grimm01 – with these instructions, a researcher or assistant should be able to reproduce the format and quality with confidence, resulting in a polished bilingual edition of this classic fairy tale ready to join the collection. 1 3
